"We are living in a simulation."

Noxious Sapienweeds aka Phalse Prophets

What is a Noxious Sapienweed?

These are obnoxious and dangerous humans that spread information that cause naïve humans to think that everything on our planet is just fine. Methods include techno-optimism, misleading solutions, insane predictions and pretending to be doing good deeds. These humans – also known as Phalse Prophets – feed their unwitting targets with information for the left brain to avoid long-term, right brain focus, flow states, and constructive action.

How do Sapienweeds spread?

These disgusting humans use “dopamine traps,” primarily addiction to technology hard and soft platforms. Some Phalse Prophets own or actively use these platforms. Once their subjects are hooked on a noxious notion, they spread the poison to others humans, creating a social cancer with no antidote.

Are there laws about Sapienweeds?

No. OK, some EU laws are in place, but they're poorly enforced. These sapienweeds are popular businesspeople, politicians, scientists and writers. Many have done TED talks, a practice of the Sapienweed species. As a result, their victims respect them, think they are smart, and do not think of them as criminals.

The phrase “Phalse Prophets” and the following pages are inspired from the Post-Carbon Institute's podcast, “Crazy Town” from 2023. Check them out. Now.
